THE EARTH

"Long ago, a malevolent force descended from the heavens during the third blood moon of the season, unleashing chaos and devastation upon the land.

This dark entity acted in the name of their deity, the Warrior King, who commanded them to venture into the cosmos in search of the precious gold required to save their dying world.

As the ominous shadows stretched across the earth, the followers of the Warrior King embarked on a perilous quest, driven by desperation and the promise of salvation, unaware of the true cost of their mission."

Nestled in the lower reaches of the lowlands of Bangor Province, the renowned Colonel Churchward led a dedicated team of archaeologists from the East India Tea Company.

While some skeptics might dismiss them as little more than uniformed grave robbers catering to the

Colonel's wealthy patrons in Delhi, I would vehemently contest such unfounded accusations.

Many members of the Colonel's team boasted advanced degrees from prestigious institutions like Cambridge and Oxford, and our expedition was proudly backed by the Royal Academy in London.

Our mission was to uncover archaeological evidence that would affirm the historical authenticity of the ancient Hindu Scriptures, challenging the notion that they were mere fabrications of fiction.

Colonel Churchward earned the affection and respect of the Bangor communities, having nearly single-handedly driven out the bandits that had terrorized and stolen from the residents for countless years.

His efforts not only restored safety but also instilled a sense of hope and gratitude among the locals, who viewed him as a heroic figure in their ongoing struggle against lawlessness.

The journey took us to a quaint village, the name of which I am bound to keep secret due to a promise made by the Colonel to the local priests and Shaman. They expressed deep concern about the potential threat posed by genuine grave robbers and clandestine groups that are committed to ensuring that the authentic narratives of ancient history remain hidden from the general populace.

These groups would not hesitate to destroy any evidence of these secrets, even resorting to fire, to uphold their solemn oaths and protect the mysteries that have been safeguarded for generations.

My presence here stems from my earlier collaboration with the Colonel in the northern regions of Nepal, where we conducted significant research.

Recently, the National Geographic made headlines with the Colonel's remarkable discovery of an ancient site, now

"referred to as the Stone Canyon, which has sparked considerable interest in the archaeological community.

My goal is to meticulously record an extensive array of cave frescoes and illustrated manuscripts, while also creating replicas of all the ancient, weathered scrolls that have accumulated dust over the years.

Similar to our earlier explorations, I will refrain from providing texts, as much of what we have uncovered is written in a language that remains unfamiliar, dating back to a time before the earliest known forms of Sanskrit.

This ancient script will necessitate the efforts of numerous scholars over many generations to translate it into contemporary English.

Attached you will find the materials I have received permission to share, and as a wise individual—whose name I cannot recall at the moment—once remarked, “A picture conveys a thousand words.” Further enquiries should be addressed to Colonel Churchward C/O of The East Indian Tea Company’s Office in Delhi.
